Ital. , p. 369. 25 The other he calls Johann Matthaeus, of Luna, in Tuscany, who wrote on the history of inventions, mentioning the Paris edition of 1520, and that of Hamburg, 1613. 26 It is obvious that Graesse not only considered them as quite distinct, but as having different names, the poet being called Toscanus, the historian Matthaeus, thus differing from Teissier and Jocher. 20. From these extracts it will be seen how much uncertainty envelopes the individuality of these writers. None of the authorities (except perhaps Draudius), gives a full list of their respective works if they were believed to be different, or collectively if they were believed to be identical. It is also worth remarking that they are neither of them mentioned by writers on rare books. Either their works were so rare that they were not known at all, or else they were not considered of sufficient importance to be noticed. When, therefore I identified these writers, 27 I followed what I thought were sound authorities, and omitted to subject them to the scrutiny which the foregoing comparison proves plainly was necessary. If I erred, it was, truly, in respectable company, but that is no excuse for not having made sure of my guides. 21. The two authors may now be specially considered. Of Joannes Matthaeus Toscanus, who, for convenience, may be called simply Toscanus, there is the briefest notice in the biographical dictionaries and histories. Tiraboschi²⁸ speaks of him as...
