The leveller, the topographer, and the two chain men are dispensed with; and, inasmuch as it is not necessary that the stadia stations come in a straight line, the amount of cutting would not be very different. 6. That the advantages of the stadia system, for the obtaining of reliable contours, with permanent field notes for This is a very mild statement, for generally a very considerable expense is justifiable in order to obtain such a map. proving the same, can scarcely be compared with the awkward and unreliable methods of the hand level or clinometer on the one hand, or with the laborious and excessively expensive method of the engineer's level and chain on the other. If the above premises be granted, then the following conclusion seems unavoidable: --That most preliminary surveys for railroad lines might advantageously be made with the transit and stadia. When the ground is level, or where the location is definite, as along the foot of a bluff or bank of a stream, the belt may be contracted in width to the needs of the final map. Certainly, for the obtaining of the data for the final charts of the company, no...
