Excerpt: . first teachings. chapter ii. first teachings. 1. Infant children come into our hands for religious teaching very early. In towns especially, parents send them not only in the week, but also on Sundays to get them out of the way; and it is necessary to receive them lest they should be received into Dissenting schools. Training and association may do much for them, but it is only a precocious child who can take in connected religious instruction before four years old. They can be taught a little gradually about God and His goodness, be taught to say easy prayers and hymns, listen to Bible stories, and point out the scenes in pictures, while the general discipline gives lessons in gentleness, obedience, and reverence. In point of fact, unless teachers are so numerous that one can be given up to these extremely little ones,...
